Testvale Squares spreads the word in Canada

One of our dancers, Lindsay, was visiting Toronto in early October to catch up with her cousin for a week of chat, culture, eating and drinking. Prior to the trip, Lindsay found a group called Triangle Squares just a short walk from her hotel, a thriving club with Mainstream, Plus and 'A' dances each week, in the centre of downtown Toronto. Run by Barry and his wife, Lindsay joined an intake of new dancers, enabling two squares on the floor all evening. The dancers had learned about 20 steps in the programme and after a few weeks were all competent with no squares breaking down, but one confusing aspect for Lindsay was a high ratio of male couples and no-one wearing a sash to indicate dancing left or right! They were really interested in what dancing was like in the UK, quite surprised that it was exactly the same, and hopefully they'll visit us in the future.

Photo: Lindsay (right) with Triangle Squares in Toronto